Rufous-Collared Sparrow is a small bird of the family Passerelidae (CBRO, 2014) with distribution of México and Central America until Terra del Fuego, Argentina. In Brazil occurs except in Amazonas forest (Sick, 1997), mainly in urban areas or near.

It's specie known to feed mainly seeds and sometimes insects.

As a result of studies and surveys conducted on Agenor Campos, Mongaguá, São Paulo state, Brazil, on 04 December, 2014, in the morning, the author, with friends Carlos R. Ghirelli and Ricardo Pires de Campos, birdwatchers, observed and recorded by photo (below) and video (IBC, 2014) two individuals Zonotrichia capensis feeding several times on the feeder of Fazenda Pesqueiro (24°03' 35.87" S/46°42'06.27"W).

So, because of an unusual feeding behavior of this species we decided to publish this simple note for the record the fact that can help in ecological study of this species.

Acknowledgments: thanks Carlos Roberto Ghirelli and Ricardo Pires de Campos, birdwatchers by the company in the field trip. And observation and incentive of Ricardo to register this fact.
